Mapping Local Religions in Vienna

Today, Vienna is a diverse capital and home to people of various different ethnic, national and not least religious backgrounds. The city has a very particular history of migration, multiculturalism and religious pluralism and, as the Austrian capital, a traditionally tolerant approach to religious diversity. The research project "Mapping Religions in Vienna" was a first attempt to comprehensively explore and address religious pluralism in Vienna from the perspective of the Study of Religions. Working with qualitative and quantitative social scientific methods, Hans Gerald Hödl and his project team collected and mapped over 800 different religious places in Vienna. In this presentation I will present the project design and research results and discuss future perspectives for the necessary maintenance of this highly contemporary project. I will introduce projects that built on the results of the Mapping-project and discuss perspectives for a potential advancement of the mapping project.
